Tinley Defeats Worth With Score of 8 to 5

It mattered not that Worth was unbeaten in league competition and that "Red" Clausen, Worth's ace hurler, was recently signed by the St. Louis Cardinals when Tinley's strong nine decided that enough was enough and proceeded to pound out an eight to five win last Sunday.

The local lads showed little respect for Clausen as they laced hits and sent him to the showers early in the fifth inning. Even less mercy was shown Teason, veteran campaigner, when he appeared to rescue the faltering Clausen. Teason was greeted with a barrage of singles and gladly retired in the seventh frame with the bases full while Hanski took up mound duties. By this time Tinley had only to coast to victory behind the superb hurling of Pat Homering.

Except for two long homers late in the contest Pat kept the Worth hits well scattered. When he going got tough Pat was at his best. An ever alert infield gave Homering able support and several times wiped of potential runs to hold a safe lead.

Tinley Will Stage '49 Roundup

A great deal of interest is being displayed in the novel affair planned by Tinley Park Civic Club.

Both our local people and our neighbors in surrounding towns are showing keen anticipation for this coming event.

On last Sunday, the Chicago Herald & Examiner published quite a lengthy account, describing this local activity.

The unique background and setting of the affair, together with the costumes and pioneer atmosphere, seems to fire the imagination and promises a truly congenial and hilarious evening.

Overalls, work shirt and large straw hat would make a suitable outfit.

Anything you can add to depict the frontier days of "49" will help to create the atmosphere of the evening which will be October 2nd.

Prepare to celebrate your Halloween this year in real style. A party and a full evening of clean, wholesome entertainment fit for the entire family. Dancing, refreshments, games and a fine floor show. All financial benefits derived will be used for local public improvements.

Folks, who plan to attend should really begin to plan their costumes now. You won't get into the spirit of the evening and miss a lot of the real enjoyment unless you are in some sort of costume.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Amanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacquin, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter. Later Inspector Harrison of the local police visits Mark and is informed about the missing will and silver. As Harrison leaves, Lola arrives. Mrs. Dane's pet parrot, "Mr. Micawber," Bert Hunt, have started a neighborhood filling station. Mark almost makes a break about the missing will and Brooke is suspicious. Returning home, she sees Lola talking covertly to Henri. Mr. Micawber, Mrs. Dane's pet parrot, is missing. Henri is ugly and warns Brooke she had better like him and Clotilde. That night while the cast of Sam's play is rehearsing and the Jacques are away, Mark shows Brooke the missing silver which he had found cached in an unused upper floor store room in his house. A black gloved hand pulls the key from the storeroom door.

"Jed stopped at your house for a minute, he'll be here pronto; the other actors—so-called—have gone home. I'll say I'm here early. After they'd walked through the first act, it was a choice between dismissing the cast or shooting them. I had a sane interval and decided not to shoot. I'm giving them tomorrow night off."

"Then I'll throw a party for the Reyburns and Fields at that new Supper club just opened in town. Give them a let-up from the play. What say, maestro?"

"Okay with me. It's darned good of you. Perhaps I have overworked them, but there is so little time before the performance." Sam sat up and ran his fingers through his hair. "With that so near, wouldn't you think those dumb-bells would know their parts? I ask you! Besides that, the leading man has walked out on us."

"It's tough. Can I help, Sam?" "Can you help? I'll say you can. Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party. Take the lead." He caught Trent's arm. "Be a good scout. Help a poor, distracted playwright-producer, will you? With you and the Crane woman in the leads, we'll make a two-star offering of it. That girl's good."

Sam's despair had changed to exultation. Mark Trent temporized: "How do you know I'm good?" "How do those bozos out in Hollywood know an actor will be a wow on the screen sometimes before they give him a try-out? Something here, m'lud, something here," Sam tapped his broad brow, "tells me you'll be stopping the show."

"That same something couldn't tell you where I'm to get the time for a theatrical career, could it? All right, all right," Mark conceded in response to Sam's groan, "I'll take the part. Give me the sides and I'll try to know the lines at the next rehearsal."

Sam caught Brooke as she entered the room. He hugged her as she exulted:

"What d'you think, gal? Trent has signed up for 'Islands Arise'! I will pack 'em in as the lead? I ask you!"

Jerry Field appeared at the door beating a huge spoon against a tin pan.

"First call for the dining car! First call—"

Sam held up his hand. "Just a minute! We're all invited to dine and dance tomorrow by the new male lead in 'Islands Arise,' Mark Trent! Sam Reyburn announcing."

"You in the play, Mark?"

"How exciting!"

"Dinner and dance in the big city! What a break!"

Jerry Field interrupted the excited comments.

"Where are your gardenias, Brooke?"

His tone set Mark Trent's lips twitching. Under cover of lighting a cigarette, he caught the girl's furtive glance at the wastebasket. She put her hand to her shoulder.

"Why—why I must have dropped them."

"Where've you been?"

"Hi there, m'lud!" Sam's tone and manner were those of a stern parent guarding his offspring. "That isn't a topic for group discussion. We don't make people punch the time-clock in this family."

Jerry Field's face turned a bright and lively crimson; his voice and eyes were furious.

"I wasn't asking Brooke to punch the time-clock. I thought I might find the gardenias for her.—I"

He stopped as Jed Stewart appeared on the threshold. He was tapping a gardenia against his lips. "Run to earth, Mark. Who's the charmer who leaves a flower outside your door?"

CHAPTER VII

An hour later Jed Stewart slumped deeper into a crimson-cushioned chair in Mark Trent's library and demanded:

"How was I to know that Field had brought Brooke the gardenias? Didn't he look like a meat-axe though, when I barged into Lookout House waving that flower and giving the whole show away by telling where I picked it up? I'm the original village cut-up, I am." He lighted his pipe.

"It wasn't all my fault. I didn't know, did I, Mark, that you and she had been cruising round this house?"

"You didn't. I hadn't told you then that I had discovered Aunt Mary Amanda's silver parked in a storeroom. Decided to wait till I had the goods on someone, but I couldn't resist the temptation to show it to Brooke. You should have seen her eyes when she saw it piled on that table."

He poked the fire till orange and scarlet flames, shot with pale green, roared up the chimney and sent a tangy puff of wood smoke into the room.

"Started for the Sole Purpose of Chiseling Money Off Me, I Suspect."

The sharp ring of the phone broke the silence.

"Trent speaking.—Lola! What do you want?—Not interested. If you like selling gas, sell it, only remember that the allowance stops.—Is she? Mrs. Gregory's word goes, here. You should have made sure of that before you set up shop.—What? What sort of paper?" Mark Trent looked at Jed Stewart who had come close and was moving his lips without making a sound. He nodded understanding. "I haven't rung off.—Yes, I heard what you said. I can't imagine how any paper you may have will interest me, but bring it here tomorrow at five.—Sure, I'll be alone.—Yes. Good-by."

Mark Trent cradled the telephone. He looked up at his friend.

"Lola has a 'paper' to sell me. She suggested that I have my check-book in hand tomorrow. What do you make of it?"

"If it is the 'paper' Mrs. Gregory witnessed, how could she get hold of it?"

"Henri?"

"She said he had written to her, didn't she? She's bringing it tomorrow afternoon! There's a catch in it somewhere. It sounds too easy. You don't think she'll back out at the last minute, do you, Mark?"

"Not if there is money in it. She said also that Mrs. Gregory was putting the filling-station out of business. It was started without a license. Started for the sole purpose of chiseling money off me, I suspect."

"Right as usual. What say we call this an evening? I'm due in court in the morning in my best Gentlemen of the Jury style; furthermore, we'll need our brains running wide open when Lola comes at five. She has a 'paper' to sell! Won't we feel cheap about our suspicions of Brooke if it proves to be the 'paper' we're after?"

"I stopped suspecting her some time ago. Shall we go up? We are getting provincial. If we were in town we'd be just beginning to go places. Toodle along. I'll put out the lights."

Mark banked the fire before he ran up the stairs. Jed Stewart yawned as he stood at his door.

"In spite of the late excitement, I'm sleepy. Nightie-night, Mark. I'll drop our problem into what the psychologists call the deep mind. Perhaps it will float to the top in the morning all nicely solved." He was whistling softly as he closed his bedroom door.

Mark crossed his dark room to the window. What a night! The sky was powdered with stars. The sparks of gold were like the lights in Brooke Reyburn's eyes when she was happy or thrilled, and she had been thrilled when she had heard of his plan to dine and dance in town.

He drew the gardenia from his pocket. Nothing beautiful about it now but the leaves. He didn't need a paper which Lola Hunt might produce to clear his mind of suspicion that Brooke had influenced his aunt in any way. He drew the flash light from his coat pocket. Lucky he had thought of it when he had taken Brooke to see the silver.

"Mark! Mark!"

Jed's voice? He laid the flower on the dresser before he opened the door. With the electric torch still in his hand he crossed the hall and knocked at Jed Stewart's door. He knocked again. Why didn't he answer? He flung open the door. A coat had been hung over the back of a chair. A shoe lay on the floor. Cold air was stirring the chintz hangings. Where did it come from?

The bath-room! Mark sprinted to the door and stopped in amazement. The window was wide open, but the air was strongly scented with perfume. The shower was dripping. Shaving materials were flung about as if hastily dropped.

He thrust his head out of the window. There were two ways to escape from the little balcony under it. Drop to the terrace, or through Lookout House. Had Jed and an intruder crashed in there? Brooke would be frightened. He'd follow them. He swung his leg over the sill.

"Stop!"

He went rigid in obedience to the hoarse warning, but only for an instant. Why was he perching like a dummy with the light from the room behind making him a perfect target for the person who had grunted? He moved his leg. No response to that from the balcony. Quickly he flashed his powerful light in the direction from which the sound had come. That would blind the person watching.

His eyes followed the light. In his amazement he lost his balance and pitched forward. At one corner of the railing, blinking and shivering in the glare, huddled the run-away green parrot.

Held up by a bird! He slid to the balcony. Reached for Mr. Micawber, grabbed him, flung him into the room behind him. He could hear the parrot squawking with fury as he closed the window.

"That seems to be that! Now, where's Jed?"

He peered over the railing. No uprisings on this balcony to slide down. The next one had iron trellises which connected it with the stone terrace. Had Jed entered Lookout House by the window? Who occupied the room of the next house which opened on it? He would investigate.

He tiptoed to the window, reduced the light in his torch before he flashed it over the glass. The shade was closely drawn and the sash locked. No one could have gone in there. Cracks of light were visible in the two rooms beyond where French windows opened on another balcony. Had Jed entered that lighted room? How could he get there? He was too stout to swing across. Could he himself do it?

He appraised the distance, stepped over, and swung. Cautiously he stepped over the rail and ripped his hands from the frosty iron.

With his heart drumming like an airplane motor he concentrated his attention on the window. A crack of light showed between the hangings. Whose room was it? Should he take a chance that it was Sam's or Brooke's and tap lightly?

A window was being opened cautiously. Where? He flattened himself against the house. Must be the end balcony outside the studio. He visualized the interior as he had seen it the day he had helped Jerry Field sketch in the tree trunks on the backdrop. Someone was crawling out! A man! He was sliding down an iron trellis like a monkey! Now he was running across the lawn bent double! He was entering the garage!

Mark Trent crammed the electric torch into his pocket and swung a leg over the railing. He hitched along till his feet found an upright, went down hand over hand, his palms sticking painfully to the iron as he moved them.

From purple tree shadow to purple tree shadow he skulked. Near the garage he hid behind shrubs. The click of a lock! He held his breath as he listened. Who had been in the Lookout House garage at this time of night? Whoever it was, was leaving. He could hear cautious footsteps. An automobile starting! He strained his ears. It was speeding down the street toward the causeway. That didn't prove anything, it would be easy enough to turn into a side road and cut back. Was the man who had sneaked from the house driving? Had he stolen the car? Even so, he couldn't follow it, he must find out why he had entered the garage.

Lesson for August 22

THE PLACE OF RELIGION IN A NATION'S LIFE.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 25:1, 2, 8, 9;
29:43-46; 40:34-38.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, Ps. 33:12.PRIMARY TOPIC—The Meeting House.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The House of the Lord.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why a Nation Needs Religion.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Place of Religion in a Nation's Life.

The nation of Israel was under the direct government of God—a theocracy as distinguished from a monarchy, or a democracy. God spoke to them through his servant Moses, but his relationship to the people was far more intimate than that of a distant power delivering laws through a representative. God dwelt in the midst of his people, and today we consider how he made provision for a place in which to meet with them, for a holy priesthood to minister before him, and made known his personal presence by a manifestation of his glory.

I. A Place to Meet God (Exod. 25:1, 2, 8, 9; 29:43-46).

Every place of worship, whether the tabernacle in the wilderness, or a church on a busy city street, testifies to the fact that man is indeed "incurably religious." He is a spiritual being, made by God for fellowship with himself. He is never satisfied until he meets God.

The pattern or plan for the tabernacle was given by God (v. 9), and was to be followed in every detail. But note that the people were to make a willing offering of all that was needed for its construction. God gives man the glorious privilege of partnership with him. Shortsighted and foolish is the man who grumbles because the church needs money. A father might just as well grieve because his children outgrow their clothing. Thank God if your church is alive and growing, and be glad for the opportunity to buy it some "new clothes."

Sacrificial gifts and faithful building according to God's plan, brought to completion a place of meeting which God sanctified and accepted.

II. Priests to Minister to God (vv. 44, 45).

Note, first, that they were men called of God. Those who stand to minister to him for the people dare not appoint themselves, or seek an appointment by men. They must be "God-called."

They were also sanctified, or ordained, by God. Only as men act in true recognition of God's selection and setting apart of his chosen servants does ordination have real meaning.

Finally, notice that the priests were "to minister to" God. His servants are to serve him, and thus to meet the need of the people for whom they speak. They are "put in trust with the gospel," and therefore to "so . . . speak; not as pleasing men, but God" (I Thess. 2:4). If you have that kind of a pastor, praise God for him, and give him your earnest support and encouragement.

III. The Presence of God (Exod. 29:45, 46; 40:34-38).

He dwelt in the midst of his people. Christians also know what it means to have "God with us," for such is the very meaning of the name "Immanuel" (Isa. 7:14; Matt. 1:23). He it was who as the living Word "became flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1:14).

For our further instruction and blessing let us observe that when God dwelt with his people his glory "filled the tabernacle" (v. 34). Is that true of our churches? Have we so loved God and so fully yielded ourselves and our churches to him that he is free to fill the place with his glory?

The word "abode" in v. 35 is significant. What blessed peace and assurance must have come to Israel when they knew that God had come to abide with them. In this world of transitory things we need such an anchor for the soul—God's abiding presence.

But God's people must move on. There are victories to be won, a promised land to take. So we read that the cloud arose when they were to move forward, and when it was "not taken up, then they journeyed not until the day that it was taken up."

The Psalmist tells us that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. 37:23). I believe it was George Mueller of blessed memory who inserted three words—"and the steps." The man, or the church, or the nation, that trust God, will have both "steps" and "stops" "ordered by the Lord."

Beginning of Eternal Life

Eternal life does not just mean that when our bodies die our souls last on. It means a kind of life which we can begin to live here and now, and which cannot be destroyed by death because it is united with God.—A Day Book of Prayer.

Always an Answer

A little girl was once teased by a skeptic, who remarked that God had not answered her prayer. "Yes," she said, "he answered. He said no."

Keeping Cut Flowers—To help prolong the life of cut flowers, wash the vases thoroughly with soap and water, and scald them.

Avoid Tarnish—Silver that is put away is apt to tarnish quickly. But if you put a few pieces of camphor in with it it will keep bright.

Sparkling Glasses—To get a beautiful sparkle on cut glass, wash in cold water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added. Dry and polish with clean tissue paper.

When Using Soda—To prevent the soda taste in foods in which soda is used as a leavening agent, dissolve the soda in a small amount of liquid called for in the recipe before mixing it with the other ingredients.

Keeping Apples—Apples will keep longer if rubbed over with a little glycerin, which can be washed off before the apples are used.

BEHIND THE HEADLINES OF HISTORY

You don't find these stories in the pages of chronicled history. Most of them are about people you've never heard of before, but whose unusual accomplishments will now be saved for posterity through this new series of short articles by one of America's greatest contemporary historians. Frustrated ambition, unrecognized success, genius which displayed itself in sudden and infrequent flashes...these are among the stories now told for the first time in

IN MEMORIAM
HORRAS JOHN—In loving memory of our beloved husband and father who died five years ago, August 16, 1932:

One by one earth's ties are broken
As we see our love decay;
And the hope so fondly cherished,
Brighten but to pass away.

One by one our hopes grow brighter
As we near the shining shore,
For we know across the river
Wait the loved ones gone before.

A Needed Step Toward Recovery

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

After months of delay the Senate recently passed a measure providing for a count of the actual number of unemployed.

All Americans interested in constructive steps toward real recovery undoubtedly hoped, when they read that announcement, that the bill would pass safely through the remaining machinery of our legislative mill and go into early effect.

For, as one Senatorial supporter of the plan has pointed out, only by knowing the true conditions can lawmakers hope to steer a safe course through the fog which thus far appears to have obscured the way to solution of our No. 1 problem—unemployment and its relief.

And America wants that problem solved—not through wasteful methods of political patronage, but through some practical system of bringing together the capable worker and the productive job.

This is hard to do when government neither knows nor seeks to know how many men and women need jobs. It is hard to do when the laudable objective of helping the jobless is hampered by ignorance of who they are, or in what work they are skilled. It is hard to do when no two sets of official figures agree.

It is hard to do when facts are unknown and the course uncharted.

A carefully-conducted census should develop these facts—and at least some of the answers. And it cannot be made too soon. For on the success of efforts to restore American workers to their accustomed places in the activities of American enterprise—whether in the fields, the office or the shop—depends not only their own well-being, but our entire national progress.

This cannot be achieved through the futile and extravagant technique of a guessing contest. It demands purposeful study and constructive action.

Julia and Edith Tilsy have returned from a motor trip thru the southern states. They visited several days with their brother, Captain John Tilsy and wife at Fort Bragg in N. Carolina.

Everett Holm was pleasantly surprised by a group of friends and relatives Wednesday evening in honor of his 21st birthday. After the young people had surprised him at his home, they journeyed to the town hall where games, dancing and a weiner roast were enjoyed. Everett received many useful gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Schwaab, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Ingersoll, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kopelman, Mrs. Frank Hartman and Maurice Paddock danced their, "Begux and Belle" dance at the Farm Bureau Community club party in Manhattan, Friday night. J is for Jelly
And Jam by the way,
Prepare some this season
Or you are the "J."

The Jolly Jelly Jar certainly deserves mention in our Food Primer — if for no other reason than that it comes into use so often, and in so many varied ways.

Jellies or jams are, first of all, important slice-of-bread spreads both at mealtimes and for wholesome little "snatches" between regular meals. Too, they are rapidly becoming a "before bed" favorite, as their pure tastiness is sufficient to ward off hunger without causing sleeplessness. And surely nothing need be said about the perfection that certain kinds of jam and jelly preserves lend to regular courses.

Glass bottles are traditional for jams and jellies, whether home-made or not, not only because they protect the purity but because the colors give a delightful foretaste. Half the attraction of jellies and jams is the rich shade which perfect cooking gives them, appetizingly visible through the glass walls of the jar. That is why the storekeeper always has his shelves nearest his store entrance filled with these fruit spreads in glass jars, where the light can strike them and show them in their most appealing hues. But for those who like to try their skill at making their own colorful array on their pantry shelves, here are a few tried and true recipes for the "J" twins — Jelly and Jam:

Grape Jelly From Bottled Juice
3 cups (1 1/4 lbs.) sugar
2 cups (1 lb.) grape juice
1/2 bottle (1/2 cup) pectin
Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1/2 minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jelly at once. Makes about 5 eight-ounce glasses.

Dried Fig Jam
3 cups (1 1/4 lbs.) prepared fruit
5 cups (2 1/2 lbs.) sugar
1 bottle pectin
To prepare fruit, add 2 cups water and juice of 1 lemon to 1/2 pound stemmed stewing figs. Cover, let stand 4 hours or overnight. Drain, chop fine, mix with juice. Measure sugar into large kettle, add prepared fruit, filling up to the last cup with water if necessary. Mix well, bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Then remove kettle from fire and stir in pectin. Pour quickly. Paraffin at once. Makes about 9 glasses (6 fluid ounces each.)

The Christian Home

In Council Bluffs, Iowa, is located a Home for orphan and destitute children, which is different from any other organization of its kind in the country. This Home was founded nearly fifty-five years ago, by Rev. J. G. Lemen, a godly man of gigantic faith in God. In fact, the Home was founded on the Promises of God.

This Home, which is the Christian Home Orphanage of Council Bluffs, Iowa, is supported entirely by the free will offerings of the lovers of God and Humanity. Thousands of children have passed through its portals during its over half century of existence. Children who were in the Home, years ago, are now outstanding men and women of today; many have won fame and fortune due to the teachings received while they were children at the Home. These same children had they been left in their original pitiful surroundings, might have helped to fill the penitentiaries of today.

The Christian Home Orphanage is a National Home for children; it is located in Iowa, but it is supported entirely by the voluntary contributions of people from all sections of the country. It receives no appropriations of any kind, and employs no traveling agents, but depends upon your goodness and mine for its support. It conducts its own school, its own laundry and its own well equipped hospital. It also has a small department for aged women.

The work of caring for homeless children, and training them to become Christian men and women, is the most outstanding work of today. The Christian Home Orphanage is doing this work, but it cannot do it, without your gifts and your cooperation. This is a work in which all can take part.

For information in regard to this remarkable Home, write to the Christian Home Orphanage, Council Bluffs, Iowa, and literature will be sent to you.

All contributions sent to the Christian Home Orphanage, Council Bluffs, Iowa, are duly acknowledged and credited in the official publication, "CHRISTIAN HOME", in which all financial reports appear, a copy of which will be mailed to you.

To Hold Clinic

A clinic for crippled children and adults will be held in the Public Health Council rooms, Auditorium Bldg., Joliet, Ill., Wednesday Aug. 25 from 8:30 a. m. to 12 noon.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

DO'S AND DON'TS

Give your camera half a chance and you'll get good snapshots.

IT'S really quite surprising the number of amateurs who go merrily along snapping pictures without giving any thought as to why their snapshots appear somewhat smudgy or cloudy.

If your snapshots can be classed with the above the chances are the trouble can be attributed to your own neglect and not to faulty construction of the camera.

A dirty lens, for example, will cause smudgy prints. A lens is the eye of your camera. Can you see clearly if your glasses are smudged by finger prints?

Cleaning a lens is a very simple operation. All you need is a soft, un-starched linen handkerchief and perhaps a match or pencil, if the lens is quite small. The rear surface of the lens can easily be reached by removing the back of the camera.

If the camera has a double lens (one behind and one in front of the shutter diaphragm), the front combination may be removed by turning to the left, which will allow you to work through the shutter opening when set for "time," with the handkerchief over the end of the match or lead pencil. If the lens is quite dirty breathe on it and then rub quickly with the handkerchief. Be sure, when replacing the front lens, to screw it back into the shutter as far as it will go.

The suggestion to work through the shutter opening also applies to cleaning the front surface of single lenses fitted to box cameras and certain folding models. Work carefully and don't exert too much pressure.

It isn't necessary and might scratch the surface.

Taking it for granted that you have a clean lens and that your camera is in good mechanical condition let's discuss some "do's" and "don'ts."

With the familiar box type camera it is so easy unknowingly to have your finger extend slightly — or more so — over the lens. The result is obvious. You will have an unattractive black smudge over part of your picture. So keep your fingers away from the front of the lens.

Another error is a double exposure caused by failing to turn the film roll to the next number after snapping a picture. If you fail to turn it you may find, when your prints are returned, that quite miraculously grandma is sitting in her favorite chair out in the middle of a lake.

When using a focusing type camera be sure to set the lens at the correct distance mark, for if you don't the chances are that your picture will be out of focus and blurred.

Here's another one. Unless you have an extremely fast lens and shutter don't try to take broadside snaps of fast-moving subjects. Moving objects can, however, be caught, even with an ordinary camera, if taken from an angle of about 45 degrees and not too close up.

Amateur snapshotting is really anything but difficult and it is quite safe to say that the majority of picture failures are the result of carelessness or lack of thought on the part of the snapshotter.

Worth Defeated By Tinley Park With 8 to 5 Score

Tinley stepped out in the opening frames and piled up a 4 to 0 margin. This sudden onslaught left the league leaders bewildered, a state from which they did not fully recover until late in the contest. Imhoff opened the game with a screaming line triple to deep center and scored a moment later on Guidon's infield out. From that time on Tinley was never headed despite several futile Worth attempts to stage a rally. Not until the fifth inning when Tinley had a six to nothing lead was Worth able to score and then only when Beck's long hit into the woods enabled him to circle the sacks with a man ahead of him.

Pacing the local hitters were Marti and Sorenson with three hits apiece and Imhoff with a triple and double to his credit. Homerding walked only two while striking out eight.

Life Insurance Underwriters To Furnish Speakers

Plans are now nearly completed by the Speakers Bureau of the Chicago Life Underwriters Association to provide speakers for clubs, luncheon meetings, church groups and schools. Men who are members of the Chicago Life Underwriters Association with wide life insurance experience and established speaking ability are offering their services gratis.

The available subjects for the 1937-38 season are of special timely interest.

- (1) Inflation and your Annuity dollars.
- (2) What the Social Security Act means to your Life Insurance.
- (3) How to get the most out of Life Insurance dollars.
- (4) Many different policies and why.
- (5) What a Beneficiary should know about insurance.

In commenting on the program for the season, Mr. Robert A. Judd, Chairman of the Speakers Bureau said that the policy of the Bureau will be first of all to select speakers who not only know their subject thoroughly, but men who have effective platform presence.

All five addresses are each limited to 30 minutes. They are strictly institutional, no companies being mentioned, nor will any literature be distributed. The purpose is definitely to acquaint more people with life insurance facts which should make them better users of the services life insurance companies are prepared to offer. Request for speakers should be made direct to the Chicago Life Underwriters Association at least two weeks in advance of the speaking date.

Everyday Cooking Miracles

Just announce at the breakfast table some morning that steak, homemade potato chips and French fried onion rings are scheduled for dinner that very night, and you won't have to ring the dinner bell a second time. At least that is the way it is with the potato chips—and onion rings—French fried in the Thrift Cooker of the Hotpoint electric range.

All you do is lift the Thrift Cooker kettle out of its well and place it on the flat surface of the Calrod unit and attach the special frying basket. On this adaptable unit you can easily maintain the exact temperature by merely switching from controlled high to controlled low heat. And it's a made-to-order frying kettle—deep, roomy, and frying basket-equipped!

And now for some French frying. You might fry your potato chips first and while they are cooling off, whisk the onion rings into the same fat. Meantime, your thick juicy steak can be broiling away to savory proportions in the smokeless broiler, and if your husband is like some we know of, you might not have a

BREVITIES

George Pinchoff, charged with the slaying of Bonnie Fox in 1928, was granted a separate trial by Circuit Judge Hall Span of Harrisburg.

L. C. Thiele, seventy-eight years old, president of the Ramsey National bank and a merchant there for fifty years, died suddenly at his home.

Thomas Tuite, secretary, and William Bolton, chief inspector of the Illinois Athletic commission, respectively, turned in their resignations to the commission.

Irvin W. Lloyd of Robinson received official notification of his appointment as district deputy grand ruler of the Illinois southeast district of the Order of Elks.

All records for monthly postal receipts were shattered during July at the East Moline postoffice, according to reports made by J. M. Ryan, postmaster.

Dr. Lewis E. Marbury of Centralia, veterinary surgeon and former chief of the tuberculosis inspection service for southern Illinois, died from injuries received when his car turned over in a ditch.

Two fleet-footed sons of Sheriff A. E. Hamilton foiled a jail break in Sterling. They ran two blocks and recaptured Billy Miller, sixteen, who was awaiting trial on an auto theft charge.

Charles J. Stone, editor of a tailor's trade journal, died of a heart attack as he was leaving downtown Chicago for his home in Lisle, in Du Page county. He was sixty years old.

The Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America ordered all affiliated meat markets in northern Illinois outside of Cook county to close each Wednesday at noon and on Saturday night at 8 o'clock.

The marriage license bureau of Boone county said only five licenses were issued during July, the lowest for a month on record. The June total was 225, highest recorded. Officials attributed the decline to the new state law requiring medical examination of applicants.

Illinois' revived oil producing industries received new encouragement with the bringing in by the Ohio Oil company of a well near Noble, in Richland county, which it is reported will produce at the rate of 2,000 barrels a day. The Pure Oil company started work on two offset locations nearby.

Calling of a special session of the legislature to convene in October, instead of January or February as heretofore anticipated, was predicted by state officials. Subjects expected in the call include drivers' licensing, a state employees pension system, a proposed amendment to the revenue article of the constitution, and other topics of minor importance.

Six feet from the safety of an outside door an aged mother and her middle aged daughter turned the wrong way in a smoke filled farm home a mile west of Downers Grove. The mistake cost them their lives, for they trapped themselves in a pantry and perished from smoke suffocation as firemen a few feet away were extinguishing a minor blaze. The women were Mrs. George J. Heck, fifty-two years old, and Mrs. Mary Dummett, seventy-six years old.

The retirement of Jeremiah L. O'Connor, sixty-eight years old, of Aurora, ended the O'Connor's family services for the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad in its eightieth year. He began working for the railway fifty-one years ago. His late father, also named Jeremiah, started in 1857. The present Jeremiah was a dispatcher in the Aurora division office for forty years. A brother, Tom, retired last March at the age of seventy, after fifty-four years with the Burlington.

Illinois' Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway received $4,982,951 out of total allotments of $94,478,201 made by Secretary of War Woodruff from this year's rivers and harbors appropriation. Of this sum, $440,000 was earmarked for expenditure on Calumet harbor and river, which is being developed as the Chicago terminal of the waterway. The remainder of the allotment will be spent mostly below Lockport on work necessary to maintain a navigable depth in the waterway a year from next January, when the diversion from Lake Michigan will be drastically reduced, said Capt. S. N. Karrick, United States district engineer. Construction of the La Grange dam below Beardstown and Peoria dam, each to cost approximately $1,000,000, will be undertaken with the new funds, according to Captain Kerkrick, who said work probably would start in the fall. Locks at those two points will be completed also.

In a surprise order, the federal social security board in Washington summarily suspended further federal financial contributions for old age pensions in Illinois. The drastic action, the first of its kind since forty-four states, including Illinois, qualified for federal pension assistance, was taken because of alleged inefficiency in the state administration of the pensions.

William O. Gosselin, widely known hotel man, died in his apartment in the Aurora hotel in Aurora, which he owned. He was sixty-five years old.

WHAT SAMMY JAY TOLD
BLACKY THE CROW

THIS is the story, the amazing story, that Sammy Jay told to Blacky the Crow as they sat in the Lone Pine. It is the same story he had tried to tell all the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest, but that in his excitement he had mixed up so that nobody could make head or tail of it, and so everybody had thought he had gone crazy.

"I had gone way, way into the Green Forest just to look around a little," said Sammy. "I had seen nothing and nobody for a long time, when suddenly I saw something moving on the ground. I flew over to see what it was, and when I got where I could see clearly I nearly fell from the tree in which I was sitting. Yes, sir. I was so surprised and—frightened that I nearly fell out of that tree!"

Blacky looked as if he didn't quite believe this, but thought that Sammy was just trying to make a big story. But he didn't say anything, and Sammy went on.

"At first I thought it was Farmer Brown's boy, for the stranger was standing on two legs, just like Farmer Brown's boy, and his back was to me. But in a minute I saw he had on a black fur coat, and I've never seen Farmer Brown's boy wearing a black fur coat, have you?"

Blacky shook his head. "Was it as black as mine?" he asked. Sammy nodded. "Just as black," said he. "In a minute he began to walk, and he didn't walk on two feet—he walked on four feet!" Sammy was beginning to get excited again. "I was so surprised that I guess I screamed. Of course, he heard me and looked up. 'Hello, Mr. Jay!' said he, and grinned, and when he grinned he showed his teeth and they were very big. 'I had begun to think that nobody lives around here and was getting kind of lonesome. You don't happen to know where there is any honey, do you?' The idea of thinking that there would be any honey as early in the spring as this! Then he walked over to a big tree and stood up and stretched his hands way up as high as he could and scratched the bark of the tree, and he has the awfulest claws you ever saw! I didn't suppose anybody ever had such claws. When I saw those I just spread my wings and flew away as fast as ever I could. And now when I try to tell about it everybody calls me crazy."

Blacky scratched his head thoughtfully and Sammy suspected that he, too, thought him crazy. "Did he have a tail?" asked Blacky.

"I—I don't know," confessed Sammy. "I didn't stop to look."

"And you say he is as big as — as Reddy Fox?" asked Blacky, his sharp eyes twinkling shrewdly.

THERE are some men and women whose successes are seemingly achieved solely through tireless scheming and almost uncanny foresight. Such people gain their objectives by secrecy and shrewdness, which often fall just short of cunning. In matters of finance particularly, they seldom miss a trick, which is sometimes taken at the expense of the other fellow.

Here we shall consider the fourth finger and its indications of this kind of mental power.

Finger of Shrewd Mentality.

Excessive leanness and length are, perhaps, the most outstanding characteristics of this type of finger. With them is also found a somewhat irregular but pronounced curve of the entire finger toward the third finger. The finger is of rather wiry appearance, with peculiarly prominent knuckles, notably the second joint. These, however, are not of the usual "knotty" variety.

The nail tip is often quite striking in its length, and the nail is invariably long, narrow, inclined to convexity of form and well set. With the hand extended wide, the finger lies extremely close to the third finger, and with fingers pressed together its tip falls just below that of the third finger.

Those who possess fourth fingers of this type usually plan secretly and thoroughly, and have an amazing tirelessness in bringing their plans to a successful outcome.

FIRST THE HILL

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THE dream is always greater than the man, however great the plan. The gaunt New Englander went forth

To build a nation in the North And little thought beyond the crest Of good green hills a little west, And yet the flag he gave to dawn Now flies above the Oregon.

For always up alluring streams New dreams move onward from old dreams,

And over hills men make their way And find new hills to conquer. They Make camp tonight, and think that here

Their march is ended. Yet the year Shall see their campfires reddened skies

But he who never dreams at all Because the dream may seem so small,

Who thinks to walk the level mile A journey hardly worth the while, Will live and die within the vale, Will never find the upward trail. For none will climb the mountain till

He, first of all, has climbed the hill.

FIRST-AID TO AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

DON'T BUY WORN-OUT HOUSE

WHEN a family goes house-hunting, the first thought is for location, and the second for a house with the necessary number of rooms. Satisfied on these points, the choice is likely to go to the house that is attractive in appearance and prettily decorated. Unfortunately, little thought may be given to another point, although as a matter of fact, it is of high importance. This is the judging of the house by what it will cost to occupy; what the heating cost will be, and the probable need for future repairs and replacements. The purchase price is paid but once, while the costs of occupancy go on for as long as the house is lived in. The lower they are, the better. For an example, consider two houses, that while otherwise the same, have differences in construction that make it possible for one of them to be heated for $50 less per winter than the other. The house that makes the saving is a better buy than the other, even though the purchase price may be higher.

If the previous occupant of a house can be located, he should be asked about the amount of fuel that was burned. Another source of information is a local dealer in coal or oil. Quite often a next-door neighbor will know.

A house that has previously been lived in will need redecoration and the refinishing of floors. This is to be expected. But before papers are signed, the prospective owner should know more about the house than shows on the surface. He should know the condition of the water pipes, the stiffness of the house, the length of life that is to be expected from the roof, and other matters that are usually beyond the knowledge and experience of an average prospective home owner.

A house is security for the money that it costs, and like any good security, should retain its value. I believe that a buyer will find that his money is well spent in engaging an architect or a competent and unbiased builder to make a thorough examination of the house, and to report on its condition. This will show the extent of depreciation. It will also be a guide as to the repairs and replacements that will be necessary in the future—the condition of the heating plant, the soundness of the timbers, the resistance of walls and roof to weather and to leakage of air and water, the soundness of the masonry and the condition of the mortar joints. All of those details have a bearing on the real value of the house, and on the maintenance expenses to which an owner will be subjected. The fee for examination will not be great; but whatever it may be, it will be little enough to pay for protection against the buying of a poorly built house.

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste.

Wants Crop Control Back

Washington.—President Roosevelt stated to the newspaper correspondents in his press conference the other day that crop control must be brought back. He said it with some emphasis. Within a few days before that, he had given his approval to a bill placing a minimum on wages and a maximum on hours in which labor could work in industries whose productions enter into interstate commerce.

The President was not specific as to details of the legislation in either case but it is important to note that he has reaffirmed his position on these two principles for it is to be remembered that both the NRA and the AAA were thrown out by the Supreme court a long time ago, and the President seeks now to restore them in another form.

This circumstance would seem to confirm assertions that have been made in various quarters lately that the President wants to maintain a "planned economy" for this country. It would seem that he is determined to go ahead along those lines and that his program for reorganizing the Supreme court was a part and parcel of the scheme. In other words, the President's new declaration about crop control and wages and hours and his support of the Wagner housing bill represent a return to the original theories which he held for "remaking" our nation.

After discussing these circumstances pro and con with proponents as well as opponents in the congress, the conclusion is inescapable that Mr. Roosevelt and his advisers are headed into new ground. They desire evidently to make the federal government the most important factor in our national life and to set aside little by little the functions of state and local governments by their course of action.

Undoubtedly there is strong argument for the policies they have adopted; certainly, there are many functions which the national government can perform more effectively and more efficiently than they can be performed by state governments, and equally, it is true that some phases of our national life should not be subjected to the influence of state lines. On the other hand, there surely is valid reason why Washington bureaucrats should not be allowed to interfere in the daily practices and convictions of individuals.

The reason I believe all of this is so important now is that always there has been a tendency of federal functions to expand. To say this in another way: Federal officials from the lowest to the highest seem to be equipped with a particular faculty for delegating to themselves additional authority as soon as they are accorded power. What the country should fear then, it seems to me, is the steady encroachment upon the rights of states and thereafter the rights of individuals. Perhaps I should have reversed the order and should have said, first, encroachment upon the rights of individuals and, second, thereafter encroachment upon the rights of states.

Now, there are those persons in considerable number who believe sincerely that the federal government is the agency through which all public functions should operate. I cannot agree. Rather, long experience in Washington convinces me that the old, old argument for state rights—so long one of the tenets of the Democratic party—has too much merit to be overthrown without consideration for the effects of the new theories. It may be that human nature has changed enough to accept new theories and live happily thereunder but I am quite convinced that human nature does not change so fast.

Wages and Hours Bill

That measure shows how this encroachment takes place and gives a rather clear picture of the expansive nature of federal policies.

The wages and hours bill first creates a labor standards board. It is circumscribed by certain limitations which say that it cannot fix wages above forty cents per hour nor can it reduce the number of working hours per week below forty. Further, a great number of lines of work are exempted from jurisdiction of the board—work of a seasonal character, farm labor, labor in certain specified industries which obviously cannot be subject to regulation without destruction of the business itself. Besides these restrictions, there is an implied warning in the bill against sudden or abrupt changes in business practices that would dislocate industrial operation or curtail employment.

These delimitations would seem to leave the board without a great deal of authority. Such, however, is not the case. Among those industries remaining under jurisdiction of the board, there is yet as much power as obtained under NRA and its codes which were so hidebound and so inelastic that thousands of firms were in open rebellion against the restrictions unless they were able to pass on the higher costs resulting from these restrictions, to the public. That is, unless they could make the consumer pay the added cost, they faced eventual bankruptcy.

I do not say that the labor standards board as now conceived will go as far as the NRA codes but experience with the present national labor relations board indicates that the public should expect the maximum exercise of power instead of any middle of the road policies. The labor relations board has become a festering sore on private initiative. Business interests everywhere, while being pounded on the back by the administration to employ more workers, are kept in a constant state of confusion by the bias of the board. This is the board which was designed by Senator Wagner, of New York, to maintain peace between labor and employers. If the labor standards board can use discretionary powers accorded it and can proceed in correcting abuses of labor as rapidly as is "economically feasible," it may be able to develop better conditions in industry. But such language as the words "economically feasible" are subject to all kinds of interpretation and if the membership of the labor standards board happens to include some radical labor leader, most anything will be economically feasible.

It is from such quirks of law that bureaucrats expand their powers.

Another Phase

But there is yet another phase of this policy that demands consideration. While the United States is one unit under the federal government, it is made up of a number of sectional units and each sectional unit comprises a number of states and even each state in some cases embraces subdivisions where practices in business and living traditions are as different as day and night. A regulation as to the fairness of hours or wages in New England may be, and probably would be, wholly inapplicable in Alabama or Georgia. A regulation that would operate satisfactorily in Pennsylvania may be, and probably would be, completely sour in the Pacific coast states. Yet this board cannot administer its regulations on a piece-meal basis; they must apply to the whole country and it is only fair to assume from the existing facts that whereas rulings may be advantageous to some sections of labor, they might completely destroy other sections of labor. The same results can be expected from the effects of these rulings on the employers, except that where the effect is adverse on employers businesses can be driven into bankruptcy—and the jobs they provided disappear.

I think there can be no denying that no law will be successful unless it has the co-operation, the active support, of a very large majority of the people. If proof be needed, it is only necessary to recall how the prohibition laws were not enforced in those areas where public sympathy with them was lacking. It does not require very much time to determine whether a law is popular. During the life of the NRA, those who opposed such impossible regulations as General Hugh Johnson dictated were branded by President Roosevelt at first as "chiselers." It was a biting criticism. Yet, within a few months there were more chiselers than there were those who believed that the law could possibly be made to work. I am very much afraid that there will be more chiselers under the wages and hours law than there are those who believe in its efficacy.

Both Sides Will Buck

The initial operations of the board and the law probably will not create a great deal of dissension. But there will be disgruntled groups of workers and there will be dissatisfied employers who will seek exemption or changes or special consideration by regulation. In some cases, obviously, the board will issue new rules. As likely as not those new rules will upset some other group or region or section and they will demand consideration.

Just here, it might be recalled how under the AAA crop control law, wheat, cotton and corn were originally considered but tobacco had to have protection and rice and potatoes and peanuts, and every other farm product had its champions battling for consideration before the Supreme court held that the law with its processing taxes was an invalid delegation of power by congress. Therefore, while I may be "seeing things" concerning the labor standards board and the new proposal for crop control, the records surely support my statement that anytime the federal government starts a new policy it begins at the same time to enable expansion of federal power far beyond the original concept of a program.

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

FARLEY WAS ONCE A BOOK-KEEPER

NOT everyone can be an individualist and blaze his own trail to fame. Some of us are better fitted for falling into line as part of an organization. James A. Farley's rise in politics is an example of the rewards which may come to the good lieutenant.

Farley was born in 1889 in Grassy Point, N. Y., a small village on the Hudson river. There were five children, and the father was a saloon keeper. When Jim Farley was ten years old, his father died and his mother started a combination saloon and grocery store. The boy often tended bar or worked as grocery clerk on the other side of the store. Through these jobs he learned to meet the public, be friendly with strangers and show sympathy for their problems. He attended the Stony Point high school and the Packard commercial school in New York. Graduating in 1906, he was employed as a bookkeeper. Jim was always interested in politics; and, before he was old enough to vote, he called house-to-house, getting out the Democratic vote in Stony Point.

His first political job was as town clerk of Stony Point. He was courteous to all, jolly, a hale-fellow-well-met sort of man who had a pat on the back for everyone. Through Alfred E. Smith, whom he helped elect governor of New York, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, for whom he was faithful lieutenant in the Presidential campaign, Farley forged steadily ahead. He won the top political plum in the United States, postmaster general.

POET WAS ONCE A LAWYER

READ this story of the conventional lawyer who became one of our most famous poets. Not a dreaming, unsuccessful lawyer, but a man with a profitable and important law practice, important enough to associate with Clarence Darrow at one time. A busy man of commerce who became a writer of songs and poems, sonnets, essays and drama!

Edgar Lee Masters was born in the little town of Garnett, Kan., in 1868. His father was a descendant of old Virginia stock; his mother, the daughter of a Methodist minister and descendant of Israel Putnam of American Revolutionary fame. The family moved to Petersburg, Ill., and later to Lewistown, where Edgar was raised in the typically respectable atmosphere of small town America.

He did newspaper work for the local weekly, learned the printing trade, and studied law under his father, who was one of the leading lawyers in the state. In 1891 Edgar Lee Masters was admitted to the bar and practiced in partnership with his father. The following year he opened his own office in Chicago where he was a highly successful lawyer until 1920.

But even in high school, Edgar Lee Masters was interested in writing and he never forgot his ambitions. He contributed to the Waverly Magazine of Boston and the Saturday Evening Call of Peoria; he wrote poems for a Chicago newspaper. His first book, published in 1898, while he was struggling to establish a practice in Chicago, was called simply "A Book of Verses." "Songs and Sonnets" followed, but none of them attracted much attention until his "Spoon River Anthology" was published in 1915.

Those of you who lament your unexciting lives and yearn for opportunity, look at his dual personality, the poet who has won such high awards in the realms of literature.

Why Firestone STANDARD TIRES are EXTRA SAFE

TAPPING RUBBER TREES ON FIRESTONE PLANTATIONS IN LIBERIA

From these plantations comes an ever increasing supply of the world's finest rubber. Economies in producing raw materials, manufacturing and distribution make it possible for Firestone to give you so much for your money.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS—eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process. By this process every fiber in every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber. This counteracts dangerous internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—because under the tread are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING—because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE because of the extra tough, long-wearing tread.

Firestone Standard Tires give you all these extra value features because they are first-quality tires built with high-grade materials and patented construction features. You SAVE MONEY because you buy this high quality and extra value at such low prices.

Before leaving on your vacation trip, join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign by equipping your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires — today's top tire value. See your nearest Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store.

Chameleons Lay Eggs

Like turtles and crocodiles, chameleons reproduce by eggs that are laid and hatched in the damp ground. For the most part, they are dainty, smooth-bodied, little creatures that live an arboreal life, and jump from twig to twig in frantic pursuit of bugs, flies and mosquitoes. But certain varieties of the species present striking appearance. Sometimes these are enhanced by warts, prominent spines and serrated crests. Their teeth are often trifid and they are armored with scaly plates that cover their chests, heads and shoulders to protect them from attack by their enemies.

Scotland's Latitude

Scotland lies in the same latitude as Labrador, Hudson bay, South Alaska and Siberia—lands of frozen soil, icebergs and dreary wastes, of intense cold. Though its northern bounds are but a few miles from the Arctic circle, it bears no resemblance to the ice-bound countries.

Benefits From Forests

The benefits from forests are many. The most important are: Protection from soil erosion; retention of rainfall by the spongy layer of leaf mold on the forest floor; lessening of the occurrence of floods; purification of the air by the inhalation of carbon dioxide and exhalation of oxygen by the leaves of the trees; improvement of fishing and hunting; the profitable use of lands which are of no value except for forests.

Early Agriculture in Ohio

So independent were the early Ohioans on agriculture that most other endeavors were considered fruitless. For example, when a young physician wanted to become the husband of Gov. Duncan McArthur's daughter, the father questioned the possibility of the young man earning a livelihood in this profession.
